Communications Strategist Becky Warren Named Partner of Dolphin Group

Los Angeles - Lee Stitzenberger, President and CEO of Dolphin Group, announced today that Becky Warren has joined its executive team as partner.

“Becky is a very strong complement to Dolphin’s foundation and its future,” said Stitzenberger. “She brings passion and intensity with her communications expertise that make her one of the go-to strategists in California. Her expertise will add value immediately for our clients and encourage the future growth of the firm.”

Becky joins Dolphin Group partners Kathy Lucker, Christine Aghassi and Elizabeth Hansell, to bring additional depth to the firm’s highly-experienced management team. Becky will lead the firm’s media relations and crisis communications practices.

Becky brings her extensive strategic communications experience to Dolphin from her previous position as Managing Director at Mercury Public Affairs in Sacramento where she headed up the public affairs practice providing strategic communications counsel to Fortune 20 companies, tech companies and public affairs campaigns. She has been consistently involved in some of the most high profile public policy debates in our state and worked with the most influential companies across the country. Becky previously served as Deputy Communications Director for Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger and prior to that, she was the Legislative and Communications Director for a prominent California State Senator.

Founded in 1974 and based in Los Angeles, The Dolphin Group has played an integral role in shaping public opinion to the benefit of its clients for more than four decades. Since its inception, it continues to meet the changing dynamics of today’s world representing the most prominent and influential Fortune 500 companies in the country.
